What communicating and reporting strategies best serve individual and organizational learning? How can these strategies be implemented? This book answers these questions by providing a model for doing evaluation in a way that helps individuals and organizations grow and improve. It will be invaluable to evaluators in facilitating individual, team and organizational learning by communicating and reporting more effectively. As well as illustrating the steps to improving communication through all phases of an evaluation - from planning to the final report and follow-up - the book also provides practical tips and useful examples.
